DETAILED ACTION

Specification

1. Applicant is reminded of the proper language and format for an abstract of the disclosure.

The abstract should be in narrative form and generally limited to a single paragraph on a separate sheet within the range of 50 to 150 words. It is important that the abstract not exceed 150 words in length since the space provided for the abstract on the computer tape used by the printer is limited. The form and legal phraseology often used in patent claims, such as "means" and "said," should be avoided. The abstract should describe the disclosure sufficiently to assist readers in deciding whether there is a need for consulting the full patent text for details.

The language should be clear and concise and should not repeat information given in the title. It should avoid using phrases which can be implied, such as, "The disclosure concerns," "The disclosure defined by this invention," "The disclosure describes," etc.

2. The disclosure is objected to because of the following informalities: the abstract is not limited to a separate sheet and exceeds 150 words in length.

Appropriate correction is required.

Allowable Subject Matter

3. As allowable subject matter has been indicated, applicant's reply must either comply with all formal requirements or specifically traverse each requirement not complied with. See 37 CFR 1.111(b) and MPEP § 707.07(a).

The following is a statement of reasons for the indication of allowable subject matter:

The present invention is directed to allow developers to develop distributed application, where a client object and a server object implemented in different languages by generating an adapter. An adapter acts as transparent glue between the Java client and the EJB on the CORBA server. An adapter (i.e. a design pattern) wraps an object reference for a server object. A client object invokes an adapter method, which transparently uses the object reference to call a skeleton of the server object. The closest prior art of records Chang, U.S. Patent No. 6,282,580 teaches providing support for communication between different implementations of object request brokers by providing a bridge, which includes a proxy object. The proxy object within the bridge stores the server object reference in its reference data. The proxy object translates messages to the transfer protocol of the server object and redirects these messages according to the server object reference stored in the proxy object's reference data. However, Chang fails to anticipate or render obvious the recited feature of a method for implementing a distributed application in a distributed data processing system, which includes executing a client object in a client that implements a first programming environment, the client object being written for the first programming environment; executing a server object in a server that implements a second programming environment that is different from the first programming environment; the server object being written for the first programming environment; in response to the client object beginning an attempt to invoke a method in the server object: obtaining an object reference for the second programming environment; and wrapping the proxy in an adapter which isolates, the proxy from the client object , and the adapter performing data conversion between the proxy and the client object for different types of data; and invoking a method of the adapter, wherein the adapter calls a corresponding method in the proxy of the independent claims 1,4,12,15,23 and 24. These features are novel and non-obvious over the prior art of record.
